THE GRAND JURY CHARGES:

INTRODUCTION

At all times relevant to this Indictment, unless otherwise indicated:

1. La Mara Salvatrucha (hereinafter “MS-13”) was a transnational criminal organization with tens of thousands of members worldwide whose members engaged in “terrorist activity,” as defined by Title 8, United States Code, Section 1182(a)(3)(B)(iii) and (iv), and in “terrorism,” as defined by Title 22, United States Code, Section 2656f(d)(2). MS-13 and its members used violence against law enforcement, military members, government officials and civilians in El Salvador in order to obtain concessions from the government of El Salvador, achieve political goals and retaliate for government actions against MS-13’s members and leaders. MS-13’s leaders also directed members to commit acts of violence, including murder, in the United States. In order to achieve its goals in El Salvador, the United States and elsewhere, MS-13’s leaders recruited large numbers of members; established an organizational leadership structure; issued rules to govern MS-13’s members; established military-style training camps; obtained weapons such as rifles, handguns, grenades, improvised explosive devices (“IEDs”) and rocket launchers; negotiated with El Salvador government officials; engaged in public relations efforts; controlled neighborhoods; and directed acts of violence and murder in El Salvador, the United States and elsewhere. Further, MS-13 used its large membership in the United States to engage in criminal activities such as drug trafficking and extortion to raise money to support MS-13's terrorist activities and terrorism in El Salvador and elsewhere, and directed members in the United States to commit acts of violence, including murders, in furtherance of MS-13's goals and to retaliate against the United States for actions, or perceived actions, taken against MS-13 and its leaders.

History of MS-13

2. MS-13 was established in the 1980s in the United States by Central American immigrants in southern California. Many of these immigrants were refugees from civil wars in Central America. Immigrants from El Salvador, Honduras and Guatemala joined together into neighborhood groups calling themselves the "Mara Salvatrucha Stoners." The "Mara Salvatrucha Stoners" evolved into a street gang that engaged in drug trafficking, extortion and acts of violence, and dropped the reference to "Stoners" in their name. As members were arrested and incarcerated, they encountered members of the Mexican Mafia, which controlled large portions of the Hispanic prison population in California. In order to gain protection while in prison, Mara Salvatrucha members pledged loyalty to the prison gang, the Mexican Mafia, and added the number 13 to their name, which became "La Mara Salvatrucha 13," or "MS-13."

3. MS-13 gang members in California organized themselves into local neighborhood groups known as "cliques." These cliques often were named after streets or neighborhoods in the Los Angeles area, such as Hollywood, Park View, Normandie, Francis, Fulton and Coronado. MS-13 also developed symbols and signs to signify gang membership and territory through use of tattoos, hand signs and graffiti. These symbols included the "devil's horns" and tattoos of the letters M and S and the number 13. MS-13 developed intense rivalries with other street gangs with members who were Central American immigrants, particularly with “Barrio 18” or “18th Street” (hereinafter “18th Street”).

4. By the 1990s, the civil wars in El Salvador and elsewhere in Central America ended. Ultimately, thousands of MS-13 members who had committed crimes in the United States were deported to El Salvador and other Central American countries. These deported MS-13 members brought MS-13 to El Salvador, Honduras and Guatemala where it began to grow dramatically. Eventually, MS-13 grew to include tens of thousands of members in El Salvador, Honduras, Guatemala, Mexico, the United States and elsewhere. As MS-13 members immigrated throughout the United States, MS-13 grew to include thousands of members located in dozens of states, including New York, Massachusetts, Virginia, Maryland, North Carolina, Ohio, Tennessee, Texas, California and Nevada.

Creation of the Ranfla

5. As MS-13 grew in El Salvador, members of MS-13 began to commit crimes in El Salvador, including acts of violence, drug trafficking and extortion. MS-13 members were incarcerated in prisons in El Salvador in large numbers and, in the early 2000s, began to organize and sought to control the prisons where they were incarcerated. This organization included the creation of a formal hierarchy, set of rules and leadership body to control and profit from the activities of the gang in El Salvador, the United States and elsewhere. In approximately 2002, MS-13 members in a Salvadoran prison organized the first leadership body for MS-13, known as the “Twelve Apostles of the Devil,” which included the defendants BORROMEIO ENRIQUE HENRIQUEZ, also known as “Diablito de Hollywood,” ELMER CANALES-RIVERA, also known as “Crook de Hollywood,” RICARDO ALBERTO DIAZ, also known as “Rata de Leewards” and “Mousey de Leewards,” EDUARDO ERAZO-

NOLASCO, also known as “Colocho de Western” and “Mustage de Western,” EDSON SACHARY EUFEMIA, also known as “Speedy de Park View,” LEONEL ALEXANDER LEONARDO, also known as “El Necio de San Cocos,” CESAR HUMBERTO LOPEZ-LARIOS, also known as “El Grenas de Stoners” and “Oso de Stoners,” JOSE LUIS MENDOZA-FIGUEROA, also known as “Pavas de 7-11” and “Viejo Pavas de 7-11,” HUGO ARMANDO QUINTEROS-MINEROS, also known as “Flaco de Francis,” and SAUL ANTONIO TURCIOS, also known as “Trece de Teclas.”

6. In approximately 2004, the “Twelve Apostles of the Devil” were transferred to a new prison and renamed themselves as the “Ranfla.” Members of the original Ranfla became known as the “Ranfla Historica.” Subsequently, the original leaders of the Ranfla Historica and other high-ranking leaders such as the defendants EFRAIN CORTEZ, also known as “Tigre de Park View” and “Viejo Tigre de Park View,” JOSE FERNANDEZ FLORES-CUBAS, also known as “Cola de Western,” FREDY IVAN JANDRES-PARADA, also known as “Lucky de Park View” and “Lacky de Park View,” and ARISTIDES DIONISIO UMANZOR, also known as “Sirra de Teclas,” formed the “Ranfla Nacional,” which was the highest level of leadership in MS-13 and provided overall direction for the gang, acting as the equivalent of a “board of directors.” Each of the defendants was a member of the Ranfla Nacional.

Organization of MS-13

7. The Ranfla Nacional organized MS-13 into a more formal hierarchy to manage gang activities in El Salvador, the United States and elsewhere. MS-13 was organized at its lowest level into groups known as “cliques” that held regular meetings to coordinate gang activities. Each clique was run by a senior leader, who was designated the “Primera Palabra,” or “First Word,” and, in some cases, a second-in-command, who was designated the “Segunda Palabra” or “Second Word.” The other members of the clique took their orders from the First Word or Second Word. The leaders of the respective cliques attended larger general meetings to manage gang operations on a regional and international level. Some cliques had members in both the United States and El Salvador or other Central American countries.

8. MS-13 members attended clique meetings and were required to pay dues. MS-13 members obtained money through illegal means, including, but not limited to, extortion and drug trafficking. The money was provided to clique leaders and used to finance clique activities, to provide support for clique members who were in jail, and, with respect to the United States-based cliques, to send funds to MS-13 in El Salvador to support gang activities there, including for the purchase of weapons.

9. MS-13 cliques were organized together under umbrella groups, called “Programs.” Cliques within a Program were responsible for assisting one another with obtaining firearms, sharing drug trafficking connections, responding to territorial disputes with rival gangs and providing safe havens for members who were wanted by law enforcement. Programs were supervised and directed by Program leaders based in El Salvador, commonly referred to as “Corredors.” These Program leaders controlled cliques located in the United States.

10. Above the Program level, MS-13 in El Salvador was divided into “Zones.” Numerous Programs fell under each zone. Individuals holding the title of “Zone Corredor” often supervised multiple Program Corredors. Zone Corredors supervised the Program activities occurring in large zones of El Salvador and were tasked with supervising multiple Programs.

11. Above the Zone Corredors were higher levels of leadership. Immediately above the Zone Corredors were the “Ranfla en las Calles,” or the “Ranfla in the Streets,” which consisted of leadership that was not in prison. Some Zone Corredors were also considered to be “Ranfla en las Calles.” The most powerful leaders in the “Ranfla en las Calles” formed a group to coordinate their activities that was called the Federacion. The “Ranfla en las Calles” reported to the “Ranfla en los Penales,” or the “Ranfla in the Prisons,” which consisted of senior MS-13 leaders who were incarcerated in El Salvador. The “Ranfla en las Calles” and the “Ranfla en los Penales” reported to the highest level of leadership, which was the Ranfla Nacional. All major decisions for MS-13 had to be approved by the Ranfla Nacional.

12. By approximately 2015, MS-13 consisted of tens of thousands of members organized into more than 200 cliques and dozens of Programs in El Salvador, Honduras, Guatemala, Mexico, the United States and elsewhere. Since 2015, there have been additional reorganizations, which have changed the numbers of cliques and Programs.

MS-13 Rules

13. In order to maintain control over the membership of MS-13, the Ranfla Nacional developed rules to govern the behavior of members. The Ranfla Nacional distributed these rules from prison to leaders in El Salvador, who then distributed the rules to members in El Salvador, the United States and elsewhere. Only the Ranfla Nacional could change the rules or add new rules. As circumstances changed, the Ranfla Nacional made changes to the rules. For example, after law enforcement in the United States began to use MS-13 tattoos as evidence against MS-13 members at trial, the Ranfla Nacional changed the rules to restrict members from getting MS-13 tattoos without the permission of MS-13 leaders.

14. A central theme of the rules was the requirement of loyalty to MS-13, or to the “barrio.” The requirement for loyalty was central to all aspects of life for MS-13 members. Members who disobeyed the rules, showed disloyalty to the gang or to its leaders, cooperated with law enforcement or disrespected other members were subject to severe punishment, including death.

Means of Financing MS-13 Operations

15. MS-13 members in El Salvador, the United States, including in the Eastern District of New York, and elsewhere engaged in criminal activity to finance MS-13 operations. Commonly, MS-13 engaged in extortion of individuals and businesses, both legitimate and illegitimate. This extortion was known as paying “rent” to MS-13, and was a means of exercising control over neighborhoods and communities.

16. MS-13 also engaged in drug trafficking to earn money to support its operations. MS-13 members and cliques trafficked in marijuana, cocaine, heroin and methamphetamine in El Salvador, the United States, including in the Eastern District of New York, and elsewhere. Proceeds from drug trafficking were collected by MS-13 leaders to support gang activities, including purchasing weapons in El Salvador and the United States. Drug trafficking proceeds were also sent by wire transfer from members and cliques in the United States to MS-13 in El Salvador, often using non-gang members to send or receive the money to conceal the transfers from law enforcement.

Control of MS-13 from Prison

17. As MS-13 grew in power in El Salvador, members of the Ranfla Nacional were incarcerated, but continued to manage the activities of MS-13 in El Salvador and the United States through the use of contraband cellular telephones, the smuggling of written messages known as “wilas” out of prisons, intermediaries and the organizational structure of subordinate leaders. The Ranfla Nacional established the organizational structure, in part, to ensure its ability to maintain control of MS-13 when Ranfla Nacional members were incarcerated and subject to harsh security measures.

The Role of the Ranfla Nacional in the United States and the Eastern District of New York

18. The Ranfla Nacional exercised control over the activities of MS-13 in the United States, including in the Eastern District of New York. The actions of MS-13 cliques and members in the United States were regulated by the rules and organizational structure put in place by the Ranfla Nacional. The rules issued by the Ranfla Nacional controlled the process for recruitment of new members and advancement to higher ranks for members in the United States. The Ranfla Nacional required MS-13 members to obtain the approval of the Ranfla Nacional prior to immigrating to the United States. Certain murders in the United States by members of MS-13, including the murder of MS-13 members suspected of cooperating with law enforcement or otherwise violating the rules of MS-13, required the approval of the Ranfla Nacional. Cliques in the United States were also required to send money from dues and proceeds of drug trafficking, extortion and other criminal activity to MS-13 in El Salvador. In order to exert greater control over the operation of cliques in the United States, the Ranfla Nacional sent trusted, subordinate leaders to the United States to manage the activities of cliques and enforce MS-13 rules, which resulted in an increase of violence in the United States.

19. MS-13 established multiple cliques in the Eastern District of New York. Members of these cliques operated under the rules and followed orders issued by the Ranfla Nacional in El Salvador. The Ranfla Nacional resolved disputes between cliques in the Eastern District of New York. In accordance with the rules and orders issued by the Ranfla Nacional, members of these cliques committed multiple acts of violence in the Eastern District of New York, including murders, attempted murders, assaults and kidnappings; trafficked drugs in the Eastern District of New York and sent proceeds back to MS-13 in El Salvador; engaged in extortion of individuals and businesses in the Eastern District of New York; and sent dues and the proceeds of criminal activity by wire transfer from the Eastern District of New York to MS-13 in El Salvador.

Expansion to Mexico

20. The Ranfla Nacional directed the expansion of MS-13 activities into Mexico and sent several high-ranking leaders to Mexico to organize operations there. In Mexico, MS-13 leaders made connections to obtain narcotics and firearms, conducted business with Mexican drug cartels such as the Zetas, Gulf Cartel, Jalisco New Generation Cartel (“CJNG”) and Sinaloa Cartel, and engaged in human trafficking and smuggling.

“Green Lights” and “Opening the Valves”

21. The Ranfla Nacional had the power to approve a “green light” on anyone it chose. A “green light” was an order to murder the subject of the “green light.” The Ranfla Nacional approved “green lights” on rival gang members, law enforcement officers, military members, government officials, witnesses, MS-13 members who cooperated with law enforcement, MS-13 members who appeared to be challenging the leadership of the Ranfla Nacional, MS-13 members who disobeyed the rules and anyone it felt had disrespected them or MS-13. The Ranfla Nacional could order a “green light” on individuals or on a group. For example, in approximately 2004, the Ranfla Nacional ordered a “green light” on all members of the Coronados clique due to a dispute between the Coronados and other cliques. The “green light” applied to specific leaders and to all members of the clique who did not join other cliques.

22. In addition to ordering a “green light” to kill a specific person, the Ranfla Nacional would also sometimes authorize MS-13 members to generally commit murders of rivals, law enforcement cooperators, police officers, witnesses, violators of MS-13 rules and anyone else believed to be worthy of death. The Ranfla Nacional called this “opening the valves.” Only the Ranfla Nacional could order the “opening of the valves,” to generally authorize members to commit murders. Orders to “open the valves” were also transmitted and applied to members in the United States. When the Ranfla Nacional determined that it was no longer in its interest to authorize murder generally, “the valves were closed” on the Ranfla Nacional’s order. The purposes of “opening the valves” were to cause fear and intimidation, to influence government conduct and to retaliate against government action.

Political Influence in El Salvador

23. The Ranfla Nacional gained political influence as a result of the violence and intimidation MS-13 exerted on the government and population of El Salvador. Through extortion and violence, MS-13 controlled large parts of El Salvador’s economy, particularly the mass transportation industry. Through control of the level of violence, the Ranfla Nacional exercised leverage over the government of El Salvador. In approximately 2012, the Ranfla Nacional engaged in secret negotiations with members of the ruling Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front (“FMLN”) party of El Salvador, and MS-13’s principal rival, the 18th Street, to enter into a “truce” to reduce homicides in El Salvador in exchange for improved prison conditions, benefits and money. Ultimately, the leaders of the Ranfla Nacional agreed to reduce violence in exchange for prisoner transfers to a less secure prison, increased benefits such as conjugal visits and cash payments. The Ranfla Nacional also negotiated with the FMLN and its rival political party, the Alianza Republicana Nacionalista (“ARENA”), to provide votes to political candidates in exchange for benefits for MS-13 and the members of the Ranfla Nacional themselves. From approximately 2012 until approximately 2015, the Ranfla Nacional directed that MS-13 should reduce homicides in El Salvador. In exchange, the Ranfla Nacional received improved prison conditions, benefits for MS-13 and cash payments. However, in approximately 2015 the “truce” collapsed and was terminated. The Ranfla Nacional blamed the end of the “truce” on the United States, believing that the United States government pressured the government of El Salvador to end the “truce” as a condition of receiving funds from the United States.

24. After the end of the “truce,” the government of El Salvador moved several of the defendants back to more secure prisons with harsher conditions. In retaliation, and in an effort to force the government of El Salvador to enter into new negotiations, the Ranfla Nacional ordered MS-13 members in El Salvador to increase violence, resulting in a significant increase in violence and murders, especially of police officers and government officials. Because they believed that the United States government was to blame for the collapse of the “truce,” the Ranfla Nacional directed MS-13 leaders in the United States to increase violence in the United States.

25. In early 2016, the Ranfla Nacional began planning for a major campaign of coordinated violence in El Salvador in retaliation for the harsher measures imposed on its members after the end of the truce. All cliques in El Salvador were ordered to provide two members to create a specialized unit of MS-13 members to be used to attack the police. These members were to undergo military training at MS-13 military training camps in El Salvador. All cliques, including those in the Eastern District of New York and elsewhere in the United States, were ordered to provide all of their profits from select months for a special collection to be used to purchase weapons for the planned attacks on police in El Salvador. These weapons included machine guns, grenades, IEDs and rocket launchers. Over $600,000 was collected for this fund, and MS-13 began purchasing weapons. Cliques in El Salvador were directed to identify the names and addresses of police officers, military members and government officials in their areas as potential targets for the planned attacks.

26. The Ranfla Nacional continued to negotiate with political parties in El Salvador and to use its control of the level of violence to influence the actions of the government in El Salvador.

Special Designations

27. On July 24, 2011, United States President Barack Obama issued Executive Order 13581, which declared a national emergency with respect to the activities of significant transnational criminal organizations. Executive Order 13581 was based on a presidential finding that “significant transnational criminal organizations constitute an unusual and extraordinary threat to the national security, foreign policy, and economy of the United States.” Executive Order 13581 applied to specific significant transnational criminal organizations named in the annex to the order and to any person or entity designated by the Secretary of the Treasury as a significant transnational criminal organization. Among other things, Executive Order 13581 prohibited transactions by United States persons or involving United States property with designated significant transnational criminal organizations.

28. On October 11, 2012, the Secretary of the Treasury designated MS-13 as a significant transnational criminal organization, pursuant to Executive Order 13581.

29. In June 2013, the Department of the Treasury specially designated defendants HENRIQUEZ and TURCIOS, members of the Ranfla Nacional, as leaders of MS-13 subject to the sanctions imposed by Executive Order 13581.

30. In April 2015, the Department of the Treasury specially designated defendants CANALES-RIVERA, ERAZO-NOLASCO and MENDOZA-FIGUEROA, members of the Ranfla Nacional, as leaders of MS-13 subject to the sanctions imposed by Executive Order 13581.

The rules included procedures for investigating violations of the rules and punishments for violators that included beatings and death;

k. The Ranfla Nacional directed the collection of money from every clique, including cliques in the Eastern District of New York and elsewhere in the United States, to be used to fund the purchase of weapons, including machine guns, handguns, grenades, IEDs and body armor to be used to attack police, military and government officials in El Salvador, in retaliation for taking actions against MS-13;
